

What NOT to do

From experience, I know that when a client starts with me they are very motivated, fired up and ready to work toward the new vision! This energy is fantastic, but put toward the wrong efforts can be disastrous! Meaning, if you put a ton of effort and time into things that get you nowhere, it will totally deflate you and crush your motivation. And that's the last thing we want!

It's very easy for people to start radically changing their diet or exercise once they decide to hire me as their coach. However, radical changes are like lying in the sun for 2 hours to get a tan---you just BURN!

I don't want you to "burn" so it's essential that you commit yourself to following my instructions as closely as possible. So until further instructed DO NOT at this time:

1. Start exercising radically more than you normally do
2. Start dieting or changing your eating habits
3. Make any other changes in your life you believe will assist you in losing weight
 - a. Stop smoking
 - b. Stop drinking
 - c. Disconnect your TV
 - d. Toss out all junk foods

The reason my program works when other fail is because:

Correct small easy steps over time = Permanent Results

This is a law of nature as much as the law of gravity! If you try to do too much you'll master nothing and feel overwhelmed which then leads to more negative feelings and less motivation resulting in poor results, resulting in less motivation—a downward spiral that leads to failure!

There will be a time to stop smoking, start eating differently, and perhaps even making decision such as disconnecting the TV. But if you try to do all this when you are not ready, you will overwhelm yourself and push yourself back to old habits.

We want these changes to BECOME rather than be FORCED!

This is a very important point! My goal is to teach you in such a way as the changes you need to make occur because you WANT TO, rather than you HAVE TO, to become healthy. Forcing yourself is painful and anything painful will not last. Does this make sense?

What you CAN do now:

1. If you feel like going for a walk rather than watching TV, that's your inner sense of health speaking to you and you should listen to it. Don't do any exercise that is radically more than your body is used to.
2. If you feel like eating healthier, or stopping at a smaller portion size, that is great. That again is your inner sense of health speaking to you. Don't radically change your diet as far as caloric intake and types of foods.

Any changes you make to your eating or exercise must pass this simple yet effective question:

Is it comfortable and did it make me feel good?

Meaning, any change you make MUST BE COMFORTABLE! The change MUST MAKE YOU FEEL GOOD!

Going for a walk instead of sitting and watching TV will make you feel good. Eating a nice salad instead of a greasy microwaved burger patty will make you feel good.

Going for a run that kills you or eating only 4 carrot sticks for dinner will make you feel NOT GOOD!

Anything that makes you feel NOT GOOD will never become established as a habit! Every habit you have developed is because what you did made you feel GOOD each time you did it!

Use this simple idea to know what to do.
